How we can assist you

- We audit and evaluate AI systems and tools from the perspective of the risk of their use in business; we also advise on how to safely implement such solutions.
- We prepare and negotiate AI-based software supply contracts.
- We advise and represent clients in disputes arising from the use of AI-based tools (including IP-related disputes).
- We will support entrepreneurs in adapting their businesses to the obligations provided for in the AI Act – an EU regulation currently under development which, following the example of the GDPR, will impose a number of additional obligations on businesses. Companies will have, in principle, two years to adapt to them from the date of entry of the AI Act into force (which can be expected as early as by mid-2024), although some provisions will begin to apply even earlier than that.

You are assisted by an interdisciplinary team

You can count on the support of specialists not only in the field of AI and new technologies law, but also in data protection, intellectual property, dispute resolution and contract law.

In addition, the AI team supports other departments of the law firm, including projects related to the use of artificial intelligence in HR, direct sales or in competition law compliance assessment.

The AI team is headed by attorney-at-law Dr Krzysztof Riedl, the firm's partner who also heads the civil and administrative litigation practice, specializing in civil law, alternative dispute resolution, and new technologies and privacy law. The team also includes: advocate Agnieszka Zwierzyńska specializing in new technologies, privacy and intellectual property law, as well as attorney-at-law Michał Pietrzyk, specialist in consumer law and intellectual property law, with extensive experience in handling IT contracts.
